Leveraging Analytics for Better Supply Chain Visibility

29 October 2010
by Mr Lim Wee Tee

Description

Lucrative procurement contracts continue to attract the attention of questionable individuals & syndicates. As proven in the recent situation at the Singapore Land Authority, procurement fraud still happens from time to time despite the strict internal controls and processes in place. Today, procurement & ERP systems are now fairly common in most large organizations. However, they are primarily used for process automation and supply chain optimization. Increasingly, there is a growing opportunity to leverage this information for greater transparency and better monitoring. This session will touch on how business analytics can be used to unlock the multitude of data within organizations and how it can be leveraged for internal controls & fraud prevention.

About the Speaker

Lim Wee Tee is the ASEAN Sales Leader for IBM Analytic Applications. He is responsible for executing sales and business development programs for the IBM Cognos brand.

Wee Tee has more than 12 years of experience in the IT and enterprise applications business, having held various business development, solutions consulting and operations roles.

In his previous jobs at Oracle and Symantec, Wee Tee was deeply involved in helping organizations transform their enterprise systems to support the new demands of business.

In this last role, Wee Tee was himself building & managing an online recruitment business in Vietnam. He fully understands the value of leveraging technology and information to drive and grow business.
